

Paula Deen helps feed the need

By STEPHANIE EDWARDS
S.Edwards@TheKnoxvilleJournal.com

Paula Deen gave Knoxville a big "Hey, Y'all" on Aug. 27-28. Deen was in town to deliver 25,000 pounds of Smithfield meat products to Second Harvest Food Bank of East Tennessee. "I'm thrilled to be here. I understand Tennessee has a need to be filled. I'm here to feed the need, literally," Deen said. "It's so wonderful to be part of this. Everyone needs help at some point in their lives. It's wonderful to give back. "There ain't a pill or drug in this world that can give you the same feeling. "I partnered with Smithfield in 2006. It's great to work with a company that is so concerned about community outreach.

"This is a holiday-quality ham. I am happy to be able to give this to families in August, and I am grateful for Smithfield's generosity." Chef Bruce Bogartz, of Rouxbarb Restaurant on Northshore, wanted Deen to experience some Knoxville-style cuisine, featuring watermelon lemonade;

a summer salad of teardrop tomatoes, toasted pecans and blue cheese; smoked prime tenderloin, finished with BBQ vinaigrette; a Redneck Relish Tray — pimento cheese, bread and butter pickles and black-eyed pea hummus; and a selection of yummy homemade desserts. Deen was also in town to give a cooking demonstration at the Food City Food Show. Proceeds from the $25 cooking demonstration show tickets benefited United Way. ■

Take the Bonefish Challenge

By STEPHANIE EDWARDS
S.Edwards@TheKnoxvilleJournal.com

Like most journalists, if I hear the word "challenge," I am game. When Bonefish Grill challenged me to put the quality of their food, service and ambience up against that of another restaurant of my choice, I was completely up for it.

My husband and I started the challenge at the Turkey Creek Bonefish location, where we were treated very nicely by the wait staff. We ordered the Bang Bang Shrimp appetizer, breaded shrimp covered with a spicy, creamy sauce. The sauce combines with the crunchiness of the shrimp for a very tasty and bold flavor that you can't help but crave.

Then, we dug into cups of the corn and crab chowder, a thick, creamy soup filled with lump crab meat and corn. This is the most comforting soup I have ever consumed.

Although Bonefish Grill is a very hospitable setting, I can imagine the soup being even more tasty and comforting while curled up in a cozy chair with a good book. The restaurant should really sell this concoction in grocery stores. I am sure it would sell well.

For our entrees we chose the shrimp and scallops and the cedar-planked salmon.

The great thing about Bonefish Grill is that, for many entrees, you can choose a preparation style for your fish and seafood. The preparation styles consist of warm mango salsa, chimichurri sauce, lemon butter and Pan Asian.

I typically go with the warm mango salsa because the fruit flavors complement the fish so nicely. However, this time, I decided to have my shrimp and scallops cooked Pan Asian style — with a Asian glaze, on a bed of sautéed spinach and a drizzle of wasabi cream.

I hadn't ever tried this preparation style at Bonefish, but I am glad I did this time. The glaze brought out the rich flavor of the seafood and hid any hints of fishiness that may have been there.

The cedar planked salmon had a definite cedar flavor. The first bite left a positive impression. But by the time I took another bite, the cedar flavor overwhelmed me. So I wouldn't order that particular dish again.

I won't name the other restaurant we dined at during the challenge. I'll simply call it Restaurant X. The Restaurant X staff did not do nearly as good of a job caring for its guests as Bonefish.

We had a 15-minute wait at Restaurant X, and it took our server about 10 minutes to come over and get our drink orders.

Our appetizer was cold by the time we received it. Then, our soup and salad came out just seconds before our entrees arrived. By then, we were hardly interested in the soup and salad. I was tempted to ask them to take that portion of our meal off the check, but I didn't.

The entrees were good at Restaurant X, but the staff's lack of respect for their customers left a bad taste in my mouth (pun intended).

In my opinion, Bonefish Grill is better prepared to handle busy evenings. The ambience is romantic and quiet, especially compared to most sit-down restaurants in Knoxville.

I have never had a bad dining experience there, and I am glad that I participated in their challenge.

Knoxville's Bonefish Grill locations can be found at 6610 Kingston Pike and 11395 Parkside Dr.

It's time for the Library Luau!

Help the Gatlinburg Anna Porter Public Library say aloha to some cash by attending the fourth annual Library Luau on Sept. 10 at Ripley's Aquarium of the Smokies.

"We are so close to fully funding the library, but we're not there yet," said Sue Bock, outgoing Chair of the APPL Board of Trustees.

Bock and her fellow trustees have been instrumental in the community's drive to build the magnificent $1.7 million bookstore-style library.

"We need the community to support another great Library Luau," said Lee Mellor, who has worked tirelessly as the library's fundraising committee chairperson.

"We can satisfy our obligation to the City of Gatlinburg with a $40,000 payment. Ripley's Aquarium pledged all the proceeds from five luaus. This is the fourth, and we very much appreciate their contribution and all the support of the community."

The luau is an island-themed party. The $75 ticket includes great seafood, heavy hors d'oeuvres, beer, wine, live music. Plus, there will be some wonderful door prizes, including a drawing for the grand prize, a 42-inch LCD television with Blu-Ray DVD, provided by Zoder's Best Western and Microtech Satellites.

"Buy a ticket to help fund the library and come out to have a good time," said Steve Kemp, chairman of the APPL Board of Trustees.

The library was named after the woman who founded Gatlinburg's first library in her own home on Burg Hill (near Arrowmont) back in the 1920s.

Porter moved here from Iowa as a widow, to live near her married daughter, Ethel Trainer.

After settling here, Anna Porter became involved in local civic activities and was concerned about the education of children here. She wrote to her friends back in Iowa, "Send me your books for the children of Gatlinburg have nothing to read."

Porter's house was the first of several locations for the Gatlinburg library and housed the library for more than 35 years. Mellor notes that a new facility has been needed for some time.

"When it was built by the city in 1972, it was considered to be the Cadillac of small public libraries," she said. "But it was not designed for the technological needs of today, and there was little free parking. That has all changed with the new building."

The new library next to the Gatlinburg Community Center sports ample parking, as well as trolley service. Designed by Trotter & Associates Architect, it features designated areas for teens and children, an adult reading area, public access computers, rocking chairs in front of a stone fireplace and an Internet coffee café.

It also includes a large area for the Smoky Mountains Collection, an anthology of important artifacts and documents from Gatlinburg's history.

Celebrate Anna Porter's legacy and the new library by purchasing a tax-deductible ticket to the Library Luau at the Gatlinburg Chamber of Commerce, Ripley's Aquarium or at the library.

Tickets are $75 for adults and $10 for children. For more information, call 436-5588 or visit www.annaportertpl.org. ■
